POLITICAL hostess
Carla Powell, pictured
- whose husband,
Charles, was Margaret Thatcher's private secretary - is furious with those who have complained about the prospect of Irish gipsies converging on Britain for the Pope's visit, remarking: 'How can we possibly exclude them from welcoming the Holy Father when the Pope himself is one of the leading critics of the deportation of hundreds of Roma from France?' Lady Powell also thinks we're in danger of making the all-ticket papal visit a 'sterile' event. She points out that, in 2005, more than five million people filed past the remains of Pope John Paul II with no ticket system in place - 'a clear illustration of spontaneity over regulation'.
